Dear Dalai Lama

I am writing to you in connection with my own Trust, the Oisitrust, which was initiated last year. Within it I have a consultancy which is called “Disability, Access, & Children International Consultancy” which can be accessed through the oisitrust internet website (www.oisitrust.org) and also via facebook social networking site. The Trust was set up to enable children’s rights and disability rights worldwide.

I note your own trust “The Dalai Lama Trust” and its philosophy to teach children, and of course there are many good charities and causes around the world reaching out to help and protect children and the disabled. Despite these good causes and existing international legal rights which many people have fought for, in order to bring hope and relief via social justice, every project requires finance and this is where many projects fail or are incomplete due to the lack of money. The oisitrust is not seeking any funds from the Dalai Lama, but is engaged in traditional fund raising projects including donations and building projects, but we are also seeking to raise funds directly from financial institutions in a method not previously envisaged. The world is a very wealthy place, and Karma suggests the most unfortunate in our world demand social justice.

I recently attended the Feile Bhríde in County Kildare, Ireland for the festival of 1.2.2011 (spring). Solas Bhríde (www.solasbhríde.ie/) which celebrates Ireland’s national saint, Saint Bridget, with its traditions both ancient and modern. Many people are delighted that his holiness is attending in mid April (April 13th, 2011) and I will be attending again at this time.

I am writing to you in the hope I can pass you a portfolio of recent letters sent to world leaders and a thesis in finance on how considerable funds could be raised from financial institutions for children and the disabled urgent needs.

I realise you are very busy and as yet have only my website and this letter to guide you, but I believe this a very serious problem worldwide and I only seek to offer new solutions.

Poverty statistics worldwide are terrible and depressing and are evident and well known. I believe poverty amongst children and disabled can be overcome.

I hope you can consider my request, and I look forward to meeting you or passing my idea to you.

Yours Sincerely.

Further to my last letter to you please accept this portfolio of letters which has been addressed to many people and financial institutions and charities worldwide.

I have forwarded a copy onto to President Barack Obama to appeal against worldwide austerity measures, and it is through your inspiration and also President Obama's visit to Ireland in May of this year, following his recent pilgrimage to the Great Buddha of Kamakura in Japan

As for many charities for children and non "able bodied" people I have supplied details of how monies in theory, and as a human right, can be raised from financial institutions worldwide, they are available at ( <http://www.sonas.lsaweb.net/>)

I hope you enjoy these financing solutions and I wish the Dalai Lama blessings with his trust the Dalai Lama trust and its philosophy "for the convergence of science and spirituality" <http://www.dalailamatrust.org/> & <http://www.dalailama.com/office/the-dalai-lama-trust>
